

TREAT GIVES RULES FOR SUMMER LIVING

Light Meals and Plenty of Sleep Are Treasurer's Ideals.

Charles H. Treat, Treasurer of the United States, and one of the most energetic officials in the employ of the Federal Government, has a system for keeping in good physical condition, both winter and summer, which accounts, he says, for the great amount of work he is able to dispose of in these August days.

"Careful diet and an abundance of rest will do wonders for any man in this hot weather," said Mr. Treat today. "Ordinarily, in the summer, a man's nerves become a little ragged and his muscles flabby, thereby limiting the amount of work he can do. Careful study and actual experience have taught me that light meals are absolutely necessary."

"It is a serious mistake to eat heartily at this time of the year. I believe in eating as often as seven times a day, always provided that on each occasion the lunch is very light. One of the best dishes I know of is rice and milk, with a dash of salt."

"There is one other practice that I follow religiously. I rest at every opportunity. When I go home in the afternoon I invariably lie down for half or three quarters of an hour, relax every muscle, and, possibly, take a nap. Then I not only enjoy my dinner, but I have a fresh start for any engagements I may be called upon to fill during the evening."

"During the summer I make it a rule to sleep more than in the winter. I want nine hours sleep every night, and every man who is anxious to keep his health should have as much. If our hard-working business men would follow these simple rules they would not suffer during the summer and their general health would be better."

ENTOMBED MINERS FINALLY RESCUED

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 14.—Six of the eighteen miners who were entombed in the Santa Gertrudis mine near Pachuca, Hidalgo, have been rescued.

The men became imprisoned five days ago as the result of a cave-in. Twelve of them are still below ground, and tapping on a pipe indicates that some of them are yet alive.

Rescuing parties are working in short shifts, boring through a wall of solid rock.

How to Live Comfortably in Hot Weather.

CONDEMN NEW WHEAT AND DISPUTE CLAIMS

Agriculture Department Says
"Alaska" Seed Will Not Yield
200 Bushels to Acre.

After receiving many requests for seed of a widely advertised variety of wheat, called the "Alaska," the Department of Agriculture has issued a statement in which it says that the claims made for the new wheat are extravagant, and that statements that it will yield "200 bushels per acre under ordinary soil conditions" are erroneous.

The department says this variety of wheat has been known for many years, in this country and Europe, and that tests made at experiment stations throughout the West have not shown it worthy of special attention. It does yield better than the ordinary wheat, in the heavy, undrained soils of France, it is stated, but as it is a poor wheat for making flour it is not grown where the ordinary varieties will thrive.

Fears Preparations of Brazil Mean a Clash With Argentina

Man Versed in South American Affairs Says Purchase of Dreadnoughts Indicates Coming Trouble—Uruguay Domination Trouble.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—An interesting story is published by the Daily Chronicle today respecting the three mysterious Dreadnoughts now being constructed in this country for the Brazilian government, which further disposes of the strange conjectures that have been publicly made that the ultimate destination of these warships is either the British or the German navy. A representative of the Daily Chronicle called yesterday on a gentleman at present in London who is intimately acquainted with all matters relating to South America and in particular to the government and finances of Brazil, where he has resided and carried on business for some years.

"When the object of my visit," says the Daily Chronicle writer, "was explained to him he expressed surprise that there should be any ignorance of or doubt as to Brazil's intentions in embarking on so costly a venture."

"It means war," he said. "That we in Brazil have known to be inevitable for a long time past, and the government has had no more subtle object in ordering these ships than any other competent government would have in the same circumstances."

Not Acting As Blind.

"Then they are not merely buying warships for speculative purposes, as has been suggested, or acting as a blind for our own government?" I asked.

"Such ideas could not occur to any one who knows the country and its relations with the neighboring states as well as I," he replied, smiling, and taking an atlas from a shelf, he opened it at the map of South America. "Study this map in connection with the history of Brazil, Argentina, Paraguay and other South American States, and you will see for yourself what I mean. Here is Uruguay sandwiched between Brazil and Argentina, with its principal port practically completely controlled by Argentina. Apart from the obvious eyes which the latter country has necessarily cast on the little state, Brazil suffers from the inconveniences of the northeastern corner of Uruguay being freely used for passing contraband goods into that country."

"It seems to me more than probable that unless something can be amicably arranged between the two big states over the buffer state, the latter will be the primary cause of a war which cannot be long deferred, and will suffer accordingly."

"And how about the other small states?" I asked.

"Doubtless others will be involved," he replied, "in the struggle, if not as belligerents as more or less innocent victims, Paraguay in particular."

"Apart from your personal connection with Brazil, how do you regard her prospects in the event of war with Argentina? Is her army able to play good second to her projected navy?"

Brazil Has Advantage.

"Her army—I am almost inclined to say 'our army,' as Brazil is practically my adopted country—has an advantage over that of Argentina by reason of its splendid discipline. Rio Grande do Sul, in particular, produces exceptionally fine fighting material, men who, like the German soldiers, are instinctively obedient to orders, whereas the Argentine soldiery are apt to ask questions and think themselves almost, if not quite, as good as their officers. The personnel of the navy is equally good."

"Is Argentina also engaged in active preparations?"

"There has been a good deal of agitation lately in Buenos Ayres for bringing the army up to date, but Argentina is generally agitating for something, and is by no means in a settled frame of mind just now."

"Then you think a war is imminent?"

"I cannot go so far as that, but I am sure that it must come, and before long. I only wish that I could think otherwise. Brazil," he added, "does not at present contemplate making war, only being thoroughly prepared for it."

"MUFFLERS" ORDERED FOR NOISY CARTS

In line with his efforts to make Washington a noiseless town, Major Sylvester has issued orders to his men to report the numbers of the drivers of the clanging garbage carts. These carts are supposed to be protected by rubber "mufflers" in such a way as to eliminate the noise problem. Major Sylvester proposes to see that they are so equipped or to know the reason why.
